

Contents

1	The Psychotherapeutic Landscape at the Start of the Twenty-First Century	1
1	The Origins of Psychotherapy	1
2	Key Elements of Psychodynamic Thought—The Importance of Early Experience, Unconscious Phenomena and Defence Processes	4
3	The Person-Centred Contribution	9
4	Cognitive and Behavioural Approaches	12
5	Questions of Existence	13
6	Differences Between Therapies and Schoolism	13
7	The Key Requirements of a Theoretical Framework for Psychotherapy	17
8	Concluding Remarks—The Cognitive Psychodynamic Approach, a Unified Framework for Psychotherapy	19
	References	21
2	Insights from Cognitive Neuroscience	25
1	Why Is Cognitive Neuroscience Likely to Be Helpful in Progressing Our Thinking About Psychotherapy?	25

xiv Contents

2	Overview of the Human Cognitive System	26
3	Controlling, Planning and Problem Solving—The Rational, Intellectual, Part of the Mind	29
4	The Limited Capacity of Attention and Immediate Memory	32
5	The Presenting Past—Long-Term Representation	33
6	The Cognitive Architecture and the Nature of Consciousness	35
7	The Role of Emotion in Cognitive Processing	36
8	Fear and the Amygdala	38
9	The Role of the Hippocampus	42
10	Obsessive-Compulsive Behaviour—A Distinct Type of Anxiety-Related Condition?	42
11	The Neurobiology of Depression	43
12	Concluding Remarks—What Are the Implications for Psychotherapy?	46
	References	47
3	In Search of the Good Life	53
1	The Motivational System	53
2	Motivational Schemas and How They Operate	55
3	Orientation and Control	57
4	Avoiding Pain/Seeking Pleasure	58
5	Attachment	59
6	Self-Esteem Enhancement	60
7	Defence Mechanisms as Motivational Schemas	62
8	Concluding Remarks—What Are the Implications for Psychotherapy?	64
	References	65
4	Defined by Our Past	69
1	Explicit vs. Implicit Memory	70
2	Autobiographical Memory	71
3	Self-defining Memories	73
4	Explicit Memory and Psychotherapy	74
5	Implicit Memory and Schemas	76

6	Childhood Amnesia	80
7	Schemas and Transference	81
8	Concluding Remarks—The Implications of Memory Theory for Psychotherapy	82
	References	84
5	Principles of Cognitive Psychodynamic Therapy	89
1	Findings from the Literature Which Guide Cognitive Psychodynamic Therapy	90
2	The Therapeutic Relationship in Cognitive Psychodynamic Therapy	92
3	The Therapeutic Process	94
4	Specific Client Issues	102
5	Concluding Remarks	103
	References	104
6	When Life Loses Its Lustre	105
1	Background	105
2	Mapping the Contours of a Bleak Inner World	107
3	Approach/Avoidance and Behavioural Activation	110
4	Pointers from the Psychotherapy Literature	111
5	A Cognitive-Psychodynamic Approach to Depression	113
6	Assessment	116
7	Ongoing Work with Clients	121
8	Ending	124
9	Concluding Remarks	125
	References	126
7	Traumatic Experiences: When the Home Collapses	131
1	Introduction	131
2	Clinical Enigmas	132
3	Contributions of the Model Proposed by Brewin	137
4	Representational Spaces and Traumatic Events	141
5	Inner Worlds and PTSD Therapy	151
6	Concluding Remarks	154
	References	155

8	Invaded by Threat: Anxiety and Obsessive-Compulsive Thoughts	161
1	Introduction	161
2	Phobia and the Inner World	163
3	Generalization	175
4	Submarine Volcanoes: Obsessive-Compulsive Disorders	179
5	Concluding Remarks	183
	References	186
9	Possible Worlds	191
1	Introduction	191
2	A Few Basics for Mental Navigation	193
3	Requirements for a Safe Navigation	202
4	Concluding Remarks	212
	References	212
10	Two Paradigms to Explore Inner Worlds: Spatial and Fictional Navigation	217
1	Introduction	217
2	Spatial Travel	218
3	Fictional Travel	229
4	Concluding Remarks	234
	References	235
11	High-Level Navigation	241
1	Introduction	241
2	Epistemic Navigation	242
3	Aesthetic Navigation	249
4	Scientific Navigation	252
5	Spiritual Navigation	254
6	Concluding Remarks	256
	References	257

Contents xvii

12	Conclusions and Future Directions	263
	References	268
	Index	271