

CONTENTS

List of figures	ix
List of tables	xi
Preface	xiii
Abbreviations	xx
Map	xxi
1 Introduction	1
1.1 Research scope	8
1.2 Book outline	39
1.3 Data collection	52
1.4 Conclusions	53
2 Building the global from the local	56
2.1 One day in New York . . .	58
2.2 From New York to the global periphery	61
2.3 The conditions of Bogotá's transformation	73
2.4 Conclusions	89
3 Development and the nation-state	91
3.1 One day in Washington, DC . . .	96
3.2 Launching development as nation-building	102
3.3 Development in Colombia (1950s–1980s)	122
3.4 Conclusions	137
4 Development changes places	139
4.1 Decentralization and its norms	141
4.2 Decentralization and international legitimacy today	155

4.3	Technologies and regulations of local development	162
4.4	Conclusions	170
5	The making of a new Bogotá	174
5.1	Decentralization and the strengthening of Bogotá	178
5.2	Control of illegal neighbourhoods	190
5.3	The process of neighbourhood legalization	208
5.4	Conclusions	234
6	The local self of the international	237
6.1	The local performance of international authority	239
6.2	Disaggregation of international responsibility	252
6.3	Resistance and local life	264
6.4	Conclusions	288
7	Conclusions	293
7.1	Decentralizing the world	294
7.2	International law and development from the ground	298
7.3	Moving to the local and the everyday	299
	Bibliography	306
	Index	338