

CONTENTS

Authors' acknowledgements	viii
Publisher's acknowledgements	ix
1 Introduction Part I	1
2 Introduction Part II	10
3 'As a system . . . the common law is a thing merely imaginary'	31
4 Recording law's experience: features of the 'case'	60
5 The postcolonial, the visible and the invisible: the normal and the exceptional	84
6 Institutionalising judicial decision making: public reason and the doctrine of precedent	114
7 What we talk about when we talk about common law: the practice of precedent	129
8 The mirror and the dialogue: the common law, Strasbourg and human rights	148
9 The judicial practice of statutory interpretation	164
10 The politics of the judiciary revisited: rights, democracy, law	188
11 Judges and democracy	208
12 The integrity of the court: judgment and the prohibition on bias	221
13 The value of participation: the rights of the defence, equality of arms and access to justice	238
14 Open justice, closed procedures and torture evidence	258
15 Imagining civil justice	274
16 Imagining criminal justice	300
17 Conclusion	331
Bibliography	340
Index	350